We hope you enjoy the best browsing experience possible with Microsoft Edge and all your other favorite browsers! This tool will help keep track of the websites you visit to make sure you're safe while you browse! Reviews: The most recent version of DoNotSpy78 was released in 2017, containing the same functions, and adding two features, i.e. cleaning sensitive data from the Registry and wiping cookies, which might not be an issue if you are serious about privacy, but these are strong options if you are not. Although the DoNotTrack setting was first introduced with Internet Explorer 9 in 2009, it wasn't until Windows 10, released a few weeks ago, that the browser natively supported it. Now, Microsoft is adding data collection to the feature by revealing data collection related to Windows Update and Internet Explorer 11, starting with Windows 10. Users of Windows 10 may be able to disable data collection when they update their OS, as Windows Update has a new "Do Not Track" section. While it looks like the option is accessible from any version of Windows Update, it appears that only Microsoft Edge can send Do Not Track headers through the "Do Not Track" section. This means that users will need to disable the feature using their browser instead of Windows Update. The list of the all Web data that is collected by Microsoft and shared with third parties is a bit confusing. There's the aforementioned Windows Update section, the Internet Explorer 11, and two additional sections. The first one offers privacy and security features that users can enable or disable, and the second one is a history of sites you've visited on Microsoft Edge. Microsoft is introducing a new feature called Flight Mode on Windows 10, which will allow you to connect to specific Wi-Fi networks only, with full functionality and privacy. Currently, this new feature is available in the Fast ring of the Windows Insider Program, but should be released in a few weeks' time to all Windows 10 users. Here's what you need to know about the new feature. What is Flight Mode? The first thing you'll notice when you boot into Windows 10 is the new Flight Mode, which has a dedicated icon in the system tray. The feature allows users to connect to specific networks while keeping a "clean" OS, with full functionality, data and privacy. When you turn Flight

Mode on, the Wi-Fi symbol appears on the system tray icon and you Keymacro is a program that helps users to copy the text from various applications and sites, and paste it into the clipboard. It can also be used to open multiple URLs in a separate tab without affecting the current active tab. The app has been designed to automate a wide variety of activities in the Windows environment, be it small or big. Keymacro is designed to work with all major web browsers including Internet Explorer, Firefox, Chrome, Edge, Opera and others. The program works with most popular Windows programs. For example, the Open Office text editor will quickly insert text from the clipboard into any selected text. The app does the task of copying and pasting text by taking screenshots, as well as notifying when a text or image has been added to the clipboard. You can also use the program to add links to the clipboard, as well as open multiple URLs in a new tab. What's new in Version 2.4.1 You can now change the keyboard shortcuts easily, without the need to change it in the menu items. The shortcuts are defined by the theme, with a customizable hotkey assigned to each item. The app is a desktop recorder and a screen recording tool that can record the Windows desktop. It is designed to create recordings in the popular video format AVI, as well as Gif format, to enable you to publish it online and share it with other people. Keymacro provides multiple recording options, including both desktop and full screen recording, allowing you to select what part of the desktop to record, as well as the part of the screen, and the quality of the recording. The program supports audio and video formats such as MP3, MP4, OGG, WebM, FLAC, WMA, WAV, OGG, WAV, AIFF, AU, RA, RA, AU, MIDI, MIDI, and all popular video formats including AVI, FLV, GIF,

HTML, MOV, MP4, MP3, OGG, OGM, and OGG, as well as DRM-protected video formats. The recorded content can be saved as an MP4, a Gif, or a WebM video file and can be shared with other people via e-mail, video hosting sites, and social media. Keymacro comes with a collection of themes, allowing you to customize its looks, including a basic theme, a transparent theme, and a dark theme. You can easily create a keymac 77a5ca646e other reasons. In this article we'll help you find out what settings can protect you and why you should stay away from tracking and other types of data sharing on your PC. To protect your privacy in Windows 7, 8, or 8.1, you should either update the software or disable the data-sharing functions. 1: Microsoft collects and shares your computer's data to improve its products Microsoft collects your computer's data to improve its software. A few of the personal data that Microsoft collects and shares with its servers for Windows include: Username Latency Internet connection type Device information Windows version Computer name Trusted Platform Module Browser information Operating system information For instance, if you use Internet Explorer, Windows will collect and share with Microsoft the following information: Your IP address Your location Time of day Web sites you visit And if you use a browser other than Internet Explorer, you might find your information collected and shared. 2: If you have certain settings turned off, the data-sharing functions will be disabled When you install Microsoft software, you have the option of turning off certain functions that are designed to collect and share your computer's data for other purposes. To protect your privacy, you should turn off these functions, unless you use them. But how do you know whether you need to turn off these settings? Here are some ways to tell: Bing: Bing search can share your history with the

Microsoft Servers. If you set Bing as your default search engine, Bing will be your default browser and will offer you the option to share history. You also have the option to turn this function off. If you enable this, you'll be prompted to select a search provider on every search. Your search provider selection can either be Bing, Google, Yahoo, or Ask.com. Windows Defender: Windows Defender can monitor your computer's files to protect them from being infected by malware and unwanted software. If you enable this feature, you'll be prompted to choose a directory where you want to back up the detected threats. Windows Security Center
