Every chapter in this book-turned-RPG is packed with seven discrete stories. The Seven Deadly Sins is a work of interactive fiction. It's meant to be read and played, and enjoyed by everyone, no matter what their reading or playing history. This is also the only game (of its kind) that puts as much emphasis on writing, voice acting, character design and art direction as it does on gameplay. Every single line and page is a beautiful, well-crafted work of art. The classic text-based parser is returned, but Seven Deadly Sins stays faithful to the spirit of reading books in a room with a loud fan and a dim light. A lot of thought and care has been put into this. Read the book, explore each world, and enjoy being swept away on a journey with this fantastic cast of characters. PAL: 7 Deadly Sins (2016) will be available on Android on April 19th For more information about Seven Deadly Sins, visit www.sevendeadlysins.com. Offa's Dyke is a long-distance, raised monument, or earthen barrier in England, known at the time of its construction as the boundary of Mercia. Amongst the best-known Anglo-Saxon monuments, it still survives alongside a number of surviving Anglo-Saxon settlements. It once cut the Midlands off from East Anglia and the north, and is still thought of as a border. After the conquest it continued to separate the kingdoms of Mercia from Northumbria; however, after the conquest and the end of its previous use as a physical boundary, it still gained a symbolic meaning as a metaphor for the competing interests of Mercia and Northumbria. It is thought to have been built during the 8th century, in a process lasting twenty or so years. The first fortifications were built by Offa's father, King Ecgberht of East Anglia and the fortress was probably constructed to rule over the partially independent kingdoms of the area, as well as as a border to the territory of the Anglo-Saxons, that were still expanding. He was succeeded by his son, Offa, who extended the southern limits of the kingdom and built a second fortification on the northern part. During the 9th century, the fortifications on both sides of the monument were built by the
