In the management of patients with anterior urethral cancer with infiltration of the bladder, in whom local control must be obtained without sacrificing normal tissues, careful preoperative planning and aggressive surgical management are required. The selection of the approach to achieve local control, the concepts of diagnosis and staging, the management of margins, the main bladder tumors, and their value for local control are discussed. Adjuvant radiotherapy techniques are reviewed, and the management of stage C disease is considered. Combinations of radiotherapy, chemotherapy, and radical surgery are discussed, with emphasis on the significance of urinary diversion in the management of bladder tumors. Started from the left side of a 3.5 inch water filled glass, 6 feet long, using a 4 inch Roman Candle fuse. The fuse is half of a propane torch sparker. Added another homemade chimney 1 inch from the end. Then on a 4" long piece of dowel, I added a makeshift back draft chimney. This was made from 1/2 inch copper tubing secured to a 4 inch diameter conduit. Again secured to the dowel so it could be bent to the desired angle. This is simply a snorkel that fits into the chimney and protrudes the requisite amount from the left side of the glass. It fits loosely so that it can freely move air down the glass and around it to stabilize a draft. The torch I used has a round base and a smaller one for the fire. The round one is used to ignite the smaller one. The igniter has a metal plate that is rotated out of the way at the beginning of the burn. After the igniter has been placed on the round one, the metal plate is rotated back in and the igniter is placed on the smaller of the two bases (effectively a fire wheel on a rotary base). The plate turns and turns, slowly turning the igniter around on the smaller base. Eventually, the igniter ignites the larger fuel. Started from a ridge, not too deep. With all it's 30 lbs of Stunt R
